Phelan, a ward of the home who is seventy-seven, went out for a short walk yesterday and remained until midnight, when he returned with a companion in the shape of a joyous bun." He was calmed and put to bed after he had tangoed about the place and upset one aged patient. But the spirit within him would not down, so he was up at 4 o'clock and at it again. This time the youngest resident of the Home, a man named McGee, whose age is seventy-two, subdued Phelan after several older men had tried and falled. William H. Ramscar, ninety years old, the superintendent of the Home, fied that Phelan was a dangerous man and would have done for his fellows had he not been cowed by the youthful McGee. Ramscar said the wards of his home ranged in age from seventy-two to ninety-three. There are forty in all, some of them women. Phelan was held in $100 ball until his son, Thomas Phelan of No. 1148 Olmstead avenue, can appear and say what shall be done with him.
